Saint Mary's Journey of Inclusion

Provost Beth Dobkin addresses the need for information about our campus conversations about inclusion. How do we communicate and celebrate the considerable progress we have made while also recognizing the substantial work that remains?

Celebrate Teachers for Tomorrow

Teachers for Tomorrow alumni are in it for the long term. Since 1999, 125 students have completed the five-year program, within the Justice, Community and Leadership major and the Kalmanovitz School of Education, which requires extensive classroom experience. Join the SMC community on Thursday to celebrate the 15th anniversary of Teachers for Tomorrow.

New Master in Management

The College is introducing a new program to help bridge the widening gap between earning a four-year college degree and finding meaningful work. Starting in July 2015, SEBA's new M.S. in Management Program offers nonbusiness undergraduate majors with minimal work experience a one-year path to acquiring the business skills necessary to make themselves more attractive to potential employers.

Former U.S. Congressman George Miller was recognized last Friday, Oct. 30 by the John F. Henning Institute for his contributions and service to the American workforce. A longtime champion of labor and education, Miller said, "It's been my passion my whole life—the education of children, and the opportunities it brings."

Liberal Arts and the Modern University

A recent panel discussion on the value of the liberal arts in the 21st century, moderated by KSOE Dean Chris Sindt, featured Vassar College President Catherine Bond Hill and R. Stanton Hales, retired president of the College of Wooster. High on everyone's mind was the current pressure to demonstrate value by virtue of a graduate's first job. Hill and Hales agreed that the promise of a liberal arts education was in how it shaped students into learners, preparing them for a lifetime.
