AstroNotes

Reports from NASA's All-Sky Fireball Network indicate that Perseid meteor activity is increasing, as it does every year at this time. This shower rises gradually to its peak—this year, on the moon-drenched mornings of tomorrow and Wednesday—as Earth moves more deeply into the stream of debris left behind by Comet Swift-Tuttle. To see for yourself, get away from city lights and look up toward its northeast radiant during the dark hours before sunrise. You can also hear the Perseids on Space Weather Radio. Remember, you'll catch more meteors after midnight than before.

Almost half of Saint Mary's student-athletes—130 total—were honored recently by the West Coast Conference, which recognizes student-athletes who successfully balance athletic success with academic excellence, for earning a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or higher. Rowing, soccer, softball and volleyball led the pack.

Korea Journal

Before SEBA's trip to Korea last month, SEBA Associate Dean Yung-Jae Lee discussed what he hoped students would gain from the visit. Associate Director of Academic Services Janet Amador, who worked with students while in Korea, kept a journal of all their activities.
