Did You Know?

Catholic Liberal Arts Education - Inaugural Symposium Asks: What's It Good For?

What is it that makes a Catholic liberal arts education distinct, and even desirable? And is it answering the needs of today's SMC students? A symposium held as part of the inauguration of President James A. Donahue explored these questions. Read more, view a photo gallery and watch for a special Bulletin on the inauguration on Wednesday.

White House Insider Pitches Public Service - Despite the Government Shutdown

Chris Lu, who spent most of his career in public service and served until recently as Cabinet Secretary to President Barack Obama, came to Saint Mary's College to extol the value of public service.

It was a gutsy move, all things considered. With nearly the entire U.S. government shut down, political gridlock in Washington, millions of federal workers on furlough, and Americans' approval of Congress at an all-time low, it's an especially tough time to make a case for the transformative power of public service.
