

Did you feel that the sharing of your opinions and reactions with your classmates supported a sense of collective understanding about social justice issues or did it raise a divide?

Are we (nationalities/race) different from one another or does our humanity tie us together?

With activist art, the artist statements often add much to their meaning and power. Are there statements that change your initial reaction to a piece after you have read them?

What is activism? What is an activist? How can activism change a community? How can it influence people and change policies?

Do you feel that you are an activist? Do you feel you have power to act on behalf of yourself and others? Are there times where you have spoken out and/or taken action to address a social justice issue?

If you were to create art that had a social or political message, what kind of comment would you like to make? On which ideas, policies, atrocities or establishments would you focus your art?

Did your opinion or viewpoint about social justice issues change after seeing this exhibition? If so, how or why?

WRAP UP

Gutfreund Cornett Art is interested in hearing your responses to this exhibition and to any of these questions. We encourage you to submit them to us to consider as we evaluate this project and, if you give us permission, we will post your comments on our website. Please send your comments to GCA@GutfreundCornettArt.com