• Appreciation of their place as citizens in global society.
• Understanding of the political, economic and cultural interconnectedness that constitutes our world today.
• Ability to communicate at a basic functional level of proficiency in a language, other than English, specific to their geographical region of study.
• Ability to analyze specific social aspects of a geographical region employing a competent and creative way he appropriate conceptual and theoretical tools of the following disciplines: anthropology, economics, history, literature and art, and politics.