The Master of Arts in Leadership program is a cohort-based program where students complete a sequential set of ten courses and an eleventh course that runs concurrent with the last four courses. This project will enhance the current design and implementation for program level learning outcomes research allowing us to explore more thoroughly the students’ capacity for graduate-level writing and research, including the integration of their lived experience with the theories they are studying. Working with data from a total of nine students from three different cohorts, we will study the intersecting elements that indicate achievement of student learning.
