

MLA STYLE, 8th Edition

MLA style is the set of conventions for formatting papers and citations in most disciplines in the humanities. This guide outlines some of the basics, but for more detailed information, consult the MLA Handbook (Reference 808.02 M699) and <http://style.mla.org> or ask a librarian.

How to format your paper

- Margins: 1"
 - Justify: left
 - Spacing: double-spaced
 - Indent: indent paragraphs ½"; indent set-off quotations ½"; use hanging indent ½" for citations
- See style.mla.org for more details and sample papers.*

Every citation has two parts:

1. the brief in-text citation right after the fact or quote, which refers to the Works Cited
2. the Works Cited, on a separate page at the end of your document, which provides full information about all the sources you cited.

How to format your Works Cited list

- Title it "Works Cited" in the center
- Arrange entries in alphabetical order
- Use a hanging indent: every line after the first line should be indented ½".

How to format "in-text" citations

- In general, put the author's name and the page number in parentheses. If there is no author or the author is an organization, use an abbreviated version of the title instead. If there is no page number, you can usually just list the author.
- If you are citing the work as a whole, rather than a quote or fact from a specific page, you do not need to include a page number.
- Another option is to mention the author's name in a signal phrase in your text, in which case you can just put the page number, if there is one, at the end of the sentence.

Work with author(s) and page number(s):	Women are more attuned to these metamessages (Tannen 198). Johnson and Wright argue that this is a matter of privilege (44-46). ...become "a colonizer in its turn" (Ashcroft et al. 218). [3+ authors]
Work without page numbers (e.g., website):	Urban displacement has increased exponentially in the past decade (Singh and Zuk).
Work with neither an author nor page numbers:	As a New York Times editorial points out, the future of police reform is dependent on who is elected president later this year ("A Policing Culture"). [use an abbreviated title]
Author mentioned in signal phrase:	Achebe calls out Westerners' "desire—one might indeed say the need-- ...to set Africa up as a foil in Europe" (783).

Food policy professor Marion Nestle also points to the astronomical sums that junk food producers spend on advertising and supermarket marketing as a reason why messages about healthy eating go ignored or misunderstood (21-23). One of the results is that, even though the USDA recommends a daily sodium intake of less than 2,300 milligrams (or less than 1,500 milligrams for older and at-risk populations), the average daily sodium intake is an estimated 3,400 milligrams (US Department of Agriculture 11). Consumers' confusion is understandable though: one study of product packaging in Canadian supermarkets found many different unregulated references to "high" fiber content, implying to consumers that even junk foods are healthy (Sumanac, Sacco, and Tarasuk).

*MLA now refers to the thing a source is published in as a "container." So if an article is from a magazine, the magazine is the container. If you accessed that magazine article through a database, the database is another container, "container 2."

Put article or page titles in "quotation marks," and book, journal, series, and website titles in italics.

[‡]Note that in MLA style, you do not include the http:// in the URL.

*This is the format when an article has a digital object identifier, or doi. If it has one, the database and article will list it. If there is no doi, provide the URL like you would for any web source.
